Railroad facilities at the railroad station and at the harbor in Stralsund were scheduled to be expanded for a daily average transshipment capacity of between 6,000 and 6,500 tons and a maximum capacity of 8,500 tons to improve shipping conditions in the ports of Rostock and Warnemuende. Stralsund harbor was scheduled to be expanded and dredged to a depth of 6.5 meters at an estimated cost of 5,800,000 Eastmarks. It was planned to begin building operations immediately after the required funds had been allocated.

25X1A [REDACTED] Comment. These building projects may be drafted in connection with the Ruegen-hafen project. The expansion of the Stralsund harbor may have proved necessary as most of the building materials for Ruegenhafen are shipped via Stralsund.
